MARK HANNA'S FAT FRYING...THE EM FECT OF MOKINLEYISM ON THE GEN ERAL BUSINESS OF THE COUNTRY... WILL MCKINLEY BE THE MAN.

There is an air of decided incredulity in certain Republican quarters over the denial of Mr. Mark A. Hanna that he has been "frying fat" out of the manuacturers of Pennsylvania and of other States for Mr. McKinley's campaign for the Presidential nomination at St. Louis. Phese doubters of the spontaneity of the McKinley movement evidently know how it is themselves. Senator Chandler quite probably believes all the stories be measure when called to vote, but all of has heard about the use of corruption money in behalf of Mr. McKinley: but he has produced nothing in support of runs, however, and finally he triumphed his belief. Instead of having can be appointed only after civil service an interest in promoting an agitation to restore the McKinley tariff by the election of its champion to the Presidency, their chief interest is to be let alone. The important tanning and leather industries, whose prosperity is largely due to the foreign market for their surplus products, would again be threatened, by the success of ex-Governor McKinley, with a restoration of duties on their hides and skins. To the woolen manufacturers it would mean a fresh prohibition of the finest Australian and Andean fleeces which they are for the first time importing in enormous quantities. The calamity howlers have asserted that the cotton manufacturers of New England are tiality in the existing lariff; and whether this be more near the truth than most of SELLING WATER. Water is a staple article on farms, and is sold more extensively than anything else. Milk contains about 87 per cent of water, and fruits of all kinds are considered more valuable if water predominates in their composition. Even grain crop is not free from water, while grass and vegetables are mostly compos ed of water. Water is, therefore, the cheapest substance procured by the farmer (for he obtains more of it by good cultivation than would be the case otherwise), and next to water is carbon. When oil, butter, sugar and starch are produced on the farm the leaves of the trees and plants derive carbon (carbon dioxide) from the air and store it in the cells. When the animals consume plants they convert this carbon into compounds familiar to all, but the cost which so far as the fertility of the soil is concerned may be very small. and when the soil can be made to de service without loss the gain is corres pendingly as great to the farmer as from

The real cost of crops on nearly all farms is that of labor, but labor is profit able according to the uses to which it is applied and the labor-saving implement must assist the laborer. If the farmer continues to grow crops for which he knows there will be low prices his labor will be more expensive than with some farm, the markets, the soil and other conditions. There are seasons when some crops pay better than others, a was the case with peaches last year which gave good results. An acre of onions may be more profitable than fiv or ten acres of wheat, and yet the cost of the onions may be less than that of of crops should be the rule, for no farme can afford to take the risk of depending cording to the skill and judgment used by the farmer, and the estimate of profits must always include that which the so A HINT TO BEAN GROWERS.

Plow deeply, make the soil rich and plant as early as possible to snap beans, in rows two feet apart. At the second hoeing plant lima beans between the rows, so as to make the hills four feet apart each way. By the time the snap beans have selded two pickings the hmas will want all the ground. Then pull the snap beans and use them, with all the weeds, as a mulch for the lunus This will insure the latter against the had effects of drought, and also bring the limas into the latest market when they fetch the highest price, besides get ting double service from the land Limas grown by this system yielded more and better berries the past yea than when grown alone with equally good culture. In raising other crops i will be possible to grow an early crop for market, and also as a mulch.

THE best of all crops, and one which will bring high prices for years, is a grove of black walnut trees. It takes time to grow such a crop, but any young farmed who will put a field in black wainut trees will at some time in the future have a large profit therefrom, as black walnut timber is very scarce, with no visible supply for the future, unless it is grown as a specialty on farms.

THE finest butter imported into the English and French markets is said to be made in Northern France, and is known as Normandy butter. Its quality is ascribed to the breed of cattle, pasture and method of manufacture.

In dehorning calves different methods are employed. When the stick potash is used the age generally recommended is four days. Some breeders say this is really too young, as the calf has not ther begun its growth, and that the horn can be killed when the calves are four weeks old as well as when they are four

IT is probable that the apple crop will not equal that of last year, but it is still in order to thin out the fruit on all trees apples later on. It is only with rejuct ance that farmers will remove fruit from the trees, but it is the only way to secure choice specimens and also to prevent the trees from overbearing.

bulk of the town's business was conducted on the levee and the streets contiguons thereto, and Main street was muddy in wet weather and dusty in dry weather, a livery stable was located out of the way at Thirteenth and Grand avenue. It was "kept" by Calhoon & Johnson. This was in "grasshopper" year. Belonging to the stable was a horse known as "the old white horse." If it had any other name most people have forgotten it. "The old white horse" was almost rigid of limb, and was so "stove up" that he was given the run of the town and ate grass by the sides of the streets without interference from impounders and deputy impounder and assistant deputy impounders, who delight in "taking up" any inoffensive animal not tied or chained or locked in. This old horse had the blood of kings in his veins and ad come originally from Crab Orchard, In those days there was no locky club.

spare change of the townspeople. They bragged modestly of their horses, which often proved to be "ringers." that is, racers with a record, travelling under assumed names. The people who lounged about the Grand avenue barn were on the lookout for this kind of people, and whenever they could, pitted "the old white berse" against the racers at good odds. One day an oldish man came along with a likely looking borse tied behind his wagon. He bragged of his horse and the barn people banteringly told him they believed "the old white horse" could beat it. When the word "go" was given both horses started off, and "the old white horse," vent around the track twice while the racer went around once. The trouble with "the old white horse," when his sporting blood got warm, was, he never wanted to stop.
